

BRIEFS FROM AE

The bee mark, cleaned up — and a market research department, live in your hub

For Barry Burris, NMD · Accelerated Experiences, LLC — July 18, 2026

What's new — plain English

1. Your bee mark is clean now.

Every place the bee showed up inline — the sidebar, the tab icon, the top of every page — used to sit inside a solid navy circle. That's gone. The bee is transparent everywhere now, so it sits on your parchment background the way it should, not boxed in. The one exception is on purpose: the big decorative bee watermark behind your dashboard greeting still uses the solid gold coin version — that's a background/wallpaper element, not a mark, so it stays as-is. Live across every page of the hub.

2. You now have a market research department — not just a one-time report.

The tri-county competitive research we ran (56 practices across Kootenai, Bonner, and Spokane, your referral network, your patient segments) used to live only in the “Briefs from AE” section and its PDF. Now Brian — your in-hub assistant — actually knows it. There's a new ■ Market research button when you open Brian, and you can ask him things straight, like “what am I missing that other practices in my market have” or “who should I be courting for referrals” — and he'll answer from the real research, not a guess. If something's outside what's been researched, he'll tell you that plainly instead of making it up.

What this means for you

- “Briefs from AE” stays your home for the full report — the maps, the charts, the county-by-county breakdown, the complete referral-partner profile and patient segments. Nothing there changed.
- Brian is now the fast way in. Instead of digging through the PDF mid-day, just ask him. He'll cite what's in the research and point you back to the full brief for the rest.
- As we run fresh research — a new competitor, an updated referral list, a different county — it gets added to what Brian knows, so this stays current instead of going stale like a one-time PDF would.

You asked what you were missing. Now the hub can just tell you.
